

As I was cleaning my room (and wondering how the heck I was going to design my page), I found an old Tiffany & Co. box from my high school graduation present. I'm not really sure why I kept the box, but I was reminded of how much I loved the classic, simple, clean and elegant look of their company's design elements. I like to think of myself as a modern day Audrey Hepburn (who I also consider classic, elegant, etc.), and I realized if I based my website design off of Tiffany's, I had a perfect match. Plus Audrey starred in Breakfast at Tiffany's, which made it seem even more fitting for my design.

I started by looking up the Tiffany blue color, which I knew I wanted to be my background. I kept the accenting text colors simple – black and white – just like the text and ribbon of Tiffany's designs. I realize I could maybe add silver in there, since Tiffany is known for its silver and platinum jewelry, but I saw no appropriate place to put it. I then scoured the Internet trying to find the matching font – only to find out Tiffany has already licensed it for its own personal use. The closest match is Baskerville Old Face, which did a great job of mimicking the Tiffany look.

All in all, I am very pleased with how my design turned out. It certainly fits my style, and I really appreciate things that reflect a person's individual style (I have worked in retail and fashion for 5 years now!). I know that while the design is not technically my own, I did a good job of personalizing it for my own use.
